Course Description & Main Objectives

The course foundations of value management deals with current issues and developments in managing value in business. Offering three different perspectives on this topic, the course is held jointly by the Institute for Market-based Management (Prof. Schwaiger), the Institute of Strategic Management (Prof. Tuschke), and the Institute for Innovation Management (Prof. Spanjol). A complementary 4-hour tutorial aims to deepen the subjects outlined in the lecture.

Teaching contents: A changing global landscape in which businesses operate necessitates a focus on effective and efficient value management, encompassing value creation, transfer, and capture as well as addressing a variety of stakeholders.

In this course, we see value management as a process. First, we discuss the foundation of value management through communication from various perspectives. On the company level, the course deals with central company values and describes how to leverage corporate communications in order to achieve competitive advantages. On an individual level, the course describes the fundamentals of business negotiations with a specific focus on negotiation techniques. Second, building on this foundation, we dive deeper into the value management for managers and discuss how to bring together organizational goals and values. Finally, we discuss value management decisions are enacted through innovation, exploring both value creation and value capture dynamics. The lectures and tutorials comprise exercises and a broad range of case studies.

Teaching aims: Students gain a broad understanding of how to effectively manage value within firms. They further understand how companies achieve competitive advantages with the help of the central value drivers and communication methods.
